

CRUMBS

From The Table

Fish And Ships. With Psalt

Sometimes you have to feel sorry for the humble pet fish. It must feel a surge of envy whenever its owner turns on the discovery channel and sees sharks, barracuda and scores of fishes carelessly swimming in open water. Most goldfish probably started life in a bag at a fair, sold without its consent to a brace-laden child with rudimentary hook-a-duck skills. It's a sad life, eh? Well thanks to the guys over at Psalt Design, fish don't have to swim in squalor anymore. Seriously, check out that fish tank. They've achieved the impossible and made a fish tank cool. Give it ten years and fish will be held in the same regard as dogs, given lavish three-storey tanks

Give it ten years and fish will be held in the same regard as dogs to explore and allowed to roam the house in water filled balls. Designed to give the illusion of a falling bead of water, the bubble tank is going to be showcased at the Design Event at Tent London during London Design Festival. Psalt Design work out of Hagglers Corner where they focus on the design and manufacture of furniture and interior products. 'Cos our city has a history of making stuff, one of their main aims to source local, sustainable produce. Because each tank is individually blown, each is unique, making them all the more special. Tell that to your fish when it's swimming off the edge of the world. The tanks are £295 each, and you can find them here – www.psaltdesign.co.uk